The story of the Flint Kids Fund began three years ago when a state of emergency was declared in Flint, Michigan, in response to the city’s lead in water crisis. Within days, donors from all walks of life responded with concern and empathy for the residents of Flint, especially the children.

Through no fault of their own, our children were exposed to a toxic chemical in their drinking water. We are now three years into the recovery, and your gift to the Flint Kids Fund is an investment in their future. Look at the faces of Flint children in this year’s report and you’ll see the strong return on your investment!

When the water crisis hit, our children were already facing adverse childhood experiences. Today, thanks to people like you, they are settling into new learning opportunities while their parents and caregivers access an array of new resources. Trust is slowly rebuilding, and the community is moving from crisis to recovery.

The Flint Kids Fund is the tomorrow fund, meant to follow this cohort of youth into young adulthood. The trauma of the Flint water crisis requires long term recovery grounded in the science of child development. Your investments made today will help ensure a more promising future for tomorrow. Thank you for being part of our recovery.

EXPANDING OPPORTUNITIES

Mary Heron assists Destiny Freeman with new computer skills.
FLINT DEVELOPMENT CENTER FOCUSES ON IMPROVING OUTCOMES FOR CHILDREN

On a cold winter’s evening, the Flint Development Center is bursting with activity, hosting a game night for youth including a visit from Paw Patrol’s Chase. Children from all ages were busy making slime, learning new games, dancing, and enjoying each other’s company.

This is the new Flint Development Center, the former Bunche Elementary School renovated as a centerpiece of place-based activity in north Flint. A $53,200 grant from the Flint Kids Fund supports programming at the new digital library and literacy laboratory, which serves over 100 children and families.

Mary Heron serves as lead literacy coach. The retired Carman Ainsworth elementary educator is passionate about this new phase in her life, assisting children and families with literacy skills, and boosting school and job readiness. “I’m making a difference and doing what’s right for kids,” Heron says. “Teaching that long, I was ready for something different.”

Working on computer skills with 5-year-old Destiny Freeman, Heron comments on the progress she has made in the literacy laboratory. “Destiny lives across the street from the Center and she loves coming here and to me that’s all that counts. This is our future.”

Executive Director Shelly Sparks looks to parents and children to better understand the programs and services of most interest to them. “With the digital library, we have an opportunity to expand services for family literacy, financial literacy, parenting classes, and workplace readiness for children’s parents,” Sparks says. “These services, offered from a central location in north Flint, will reduce the prevalence of poverty among young families and ultimately improve outcomes for children.”
LEARNING THROUGH PLAY

Scholarship recipient Ryden Wallace, age 2, with teacher Samantha Hill.
Jasmine Wallace works from home, an impossible task with two young children playing around her desk demanding attention. The Flint mother was looking for quality child care for her children and was thrilled to find Peyton’s Learning Place in Clio. The location works well for the family because Wallace’s parents live in Clio.

She was more excited to learn about the early childhood scholarships being offered there through Child Care Network Regional 4C. The scholarship program is part of a $250,000 grant supported by the Flint Kids Fund. Through the program, Flint parents are eligible to receive a child care subsidy based on their income.

“They get to interact with other children their ages,” Wallace says. “Being able to be around other children and learning new things … it’s helping me!”

Kyden, age 2, enjoys singing new songs at home and loves being read to. Daughter Alyna, age 3, is now potty-trained and that’s been a huge help for mom. And teachers are helping with her speech skills as well.

“Scholarships like these reduce the financial burden for families. Child care is expensive and families may not earn enough income to afford the full cost of care,” said Annette J. Sobocinski, Executive Director of Child Care Network Regional 4C. “Our goal is that 95 percent of families will report their children as being better prepared for school as a result of this program.”

Beyond the scholarships, the Network also provides support to Flint area child care providers on quality improvement initiatives, such as the Great Start to Quality.
Yet, breastfeeding rates in Genesee County are dismal. In the latest state report from 2018, only 22 infants were breast fed beyond 11 months of age, compared with the 1,458 who initiated on breastfeeding at birth.

Breaking down the barriers to breastfeeding is the goal of the Michigan State University Extension Breastfeeding Initiative Program, funded with a $70,600 grant from the Flint Kids Fund. LaTashia Perry, certified lactation consultant and mother of five children herself, leads the program in Flint.

“Mothers feel like they don’t have anyone to understand what they’re going through,” says Perry. “Being able to see someone not just talking about it, but doing it, helps.”

At the Baby Café, located at Atherton Van Y Elementary School, mothers gather for clinical and social time in a family friendly environment. Qiana Edwards of Flint appreciates the support she receives as she breastfeeds her infant, Ariah. Today she wonders if she is producing enough milk, sensing a decrease in the supply. Ariah is weighed on the scale, making sure she is gaining weight and reassuring mom that she is producing enough milk. “I would tell new mothers that if they get discouraged, seek help,” Edwards says.

Beyond the Baby Café, Perry offers home visits and consultations by phone. I’ve see a lot of women excited to breastfeed, and many drop off after six weeks to return to work,” Perry says. “Our goal is to get them through the first year. That’s why peer counseling support is so important. Mom to mom support with no judgments.”

Breast milk is often called “nature’s perfect food.” The health benefits of breastfeeding are well documented, along with the cost savings to families.
AN ASSET FOR NEW MOMS

Located next to the Carriage Town Family Center on Garland Street, the new playground is a major enhancement to an area where no playground exists. Funded with a $79,500 grant from the Flint Kids Fund, it includes a colorful new playground structure, two swing sets, garden beds, wrought iron fencing with safety gates, a brick pathway, and landscaping.

In addition to early childhood education and physical activity, children will receive hands-on gardening experience with the installation of two raised garden beds, explained Cindy Johns, Director of Community Engagement and Development at Carriage Town Ministries. “With help from local master gardeners, children will be planting their own food, using food from the garden to create healthy meals and after schools snacks, and learning the nutritional value of foods that help combat the effects of lead.”

The learning playground is a nice compliment to the Early Head Start program started last fall. A former clothing room was converted into two classrooms. Pre-school age children are playing with purpose and establishing routines, schedules and structure — what children need early on, says Trina Carswell, Resident Life Director.

“Having children in a safe place where they are learning helps parents transition quicker to housing and employment,” Carswell explained. “And children can stay in the program once transitioned.”

Johns is excited for the planting event scheduled on Memorial Day and the upcoming opportunities for fun learning experiences outdoors, in the sunshine.

FLINT KIDS FUND REPORT 2018
CAMPAIN FOR FLINT KIDS

The Campaign for the Children of Flint continues. This comprehensive, forward-thinking effort seeks to meet the long-term health, development, and education needs of Flint children and their families by supporting programs necessary to ensure the children of Flint thrive.

We are raising resources for what is essential for children:

- High quality early education
- Healthy food and nutrition
- A medical home and child health team
- Family, social, and emotional support

Fund Goals
FLINT KIDS is seeking $50 million in private support over the next 10 years. These funds will provide the resources necessary to address challenges created by the Flint water crisis and 40 years of serious, community-wide economic decline.

While lead exposure is detrimental to anyone exposed, it is particularly harmful to children. Lead exposure can result in life-long health, developmental, and behavioral problems. Prior to the water crisis, Flint children already faced significant adverse childhood experiences associated with poverty and racial disparities resulting from decades of economic decline.

By investing in our children, the Flint Kids Fund will provide the needed resources for all Flint children to grow and develop into healthy young adults. Thank you for helping our children access community-based systems that optimize learning, school achievement, health and development, social skills, and confidence.

Flint Kids Advisory Committee
Grants from the Flint Kids Fund are advised by an eight-member advisory committee, many of whom are Flint residents. Grants from the Fund support nonprofit organizations that provide interventions and support positive outcomes for Flint children. We are grateful to the Flint Child Health and Development Fund Advisory Committee for its dedication and support.

GRANTEES SPEAK OUT

To better understand the impact of grantmaking investments from the Flint Kids Fund, the Foundation for Flint has engaged Detroit-based JFM Consulting Group to conduct an evaluation. The three-year evaluation period began in 2017, and is funded by The Kresge Foundation.

The purpose of the evaluation is to better understand the progress, achievements, challenges, and lessons learned through support of programs and services that attempt to mitigate lead exposure among young children in Flint. A survey was distributed to Flint Kids grantee organizations to determine the strengths and gaps in the network of services, programs, and resources in Flint to mitigate the impact of the Flint water crisis on young children. We asked grantees this question:

To what extent are Flint Kids Fund investments helping to support an integrated and holistic approach to serving children’s health and education needs?

THANKS TO YOUR SUPPORT

- Nutrition and food accessibility were enhanced through collective efforts from grant funded agencies, relative to food cooking demonstrations, food baskets and food pharmacy efforts.

- Schools provide resiliency programming and distribution of food baskets; and literacy has improved as a result of grantmaking efforts.

- Through school activities, museum programming, and a summer camp, youth were provided opportunities to participate in physical activities beneficial to their overall well-being.

We also learned grantees would like the foundation to bring groups together to share work, network, and build connections. They also recommended expansion of the age of service provision to include all youth.

Among surveyed grantees and interview respondents, there is consensus the financial support from the Flint Kids Fund has been crucial in serving Flint’s children and linking families to supports to mitigate the effects of lead exposure. The evaluation continues in 2019, and we are grateful for your continued support.

CHRISTIAN GREENE
International Academy of Flint Student
The future of thousands of Flint children has been forever altered. More than 13,000 children under the age of eight were exposed to lead-tainted water for over two years.

Thanks to your help, Flint children and their families have access to needed interventions to overcome this population-wide exposure to lead. Thanks to you and these incredible programs and services, we look forward to a future where all Flint children are strong, resilient, and healthy. With your continued investment, we believe this is possible.
